Letter from New Mexico.

GOLDEN, N. M., June 28, 1887 .- I would like to call the attention of those Virginians who, for reasons satisfactory to themselves, contemplate moving West, to the attractions and advantages of the beautiful Rio Grande Valley, in New Mexico. To my mind it is a question of considerable doubt whether the fertile wheat lands of Dakota and the other Northern territories would ever reconcile or compensate Virginians for the abominable winters and everlasting winds they would be compelled to endure in those northern regions. It always seem-ed to me that those localities were better suited for Norwegians, Danes, Swedes and the other nationalities of Northern Europe, by which the Northwestern States and territories are so largely peopled, than they are for Americans. I want to say a word concerning New Mexico. I have lived here a year and I know what I am talking about. I will refer to its climatic and material advantages. In the first place New Mexico has the mildest and most equable climate in America. At this point we are 8,000 feet above the sea, consequently we have no extremes of high temperature. The summers are cool and pleasant. The moment the sun sinks behind the western range fires become a luxury, even in July and August, while a pair of blankets are necessary at night all through the summer. The past winter was a constant succession of mild, bright, sunny days, for although the elevation is so high in this part of the Rocky Mountain region, yet the Southern latitude of New Mexico tempers the severity of its winters. Reports this spring from the more northern territories, relative to the loss of cattle, give offi-cial statements of forty and fifty per cent. loss, while here in New Mexico the loss among the cattle amounted the past winter to three per cent. One of the most delightful occupations as well as a renumerative source of income in well as a renumerative source of income in this territory is the grape industry in the Rio Grande Valley. The vineyards there are rapidly assuming large proportions and will prove serious competitors to those of California. There is no valid reason why the wines of New Mexico should not acquire a reputation equal to the vintages of the Danube and the Rhine. All sorts and kinds of fruits grow to perfection in this favored locality, and this valley is destined to become a great wine fruit centre. This valley is also one of the few locations on the surface of the earth where the soil and climate, are peculiarly adapted to the growing and curing of the choicest raisins. A peculiarity of the grapes grown in this valley is that they contain at least 20 per cent, more sugar than the same grapes grown in California, and as sugar is essential in the grape for the production of a first class raisin, we have it. When we take into consideration the extremely limited extent of the earth's surface where raisins can be produced, there would be no doubt of a continued good income from a vineyard that it is figured will cost in three years, when it comes in bearing for twenty acres (paying $20 per acre.) $1,175 and the third year from planting it should produce about $0,000 pounds, which at the rate grapes are now selling here, 5 cents per pound at the vineyards for muscats, there would be enough and more to pay the whole outlay, and when the vineyard comes into full bearing of five to ten tons to the acre, there would be an income that would be a big percentage on a valuation of $1,000 per acre. A man with one thousand dollars capital could come to the Rio Grande Valley with his family, and purchasing 20 acres of irrigated land at from $20 to $30 per acre, set out ten of it in grapes, and easily support himself and dependents on the other ten acres planted in the small grains, vegetables, etc., and by the aid of poultry and eggs. At the end of three years he would have a vineyard worth $500 per acre, and capable of producing from five to seven thousand dollars worth of wine per annum, a sum sufficient to keep any family in luxury. I remarked that he could support his family on the other ten acres till his vineyard came in bearing, and so he could. He could raise a crop of corn and wheat from the same land the same year-wheat 40 bushels, worth 85 cents, and corn 75 bushels, worth 70 cents.

all this he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he is located in the healthiest climate in the world and among the grandest and most sublime natural scenery in America—pulmonary and malarial diseases CARRIAGES, BUGGIES and SPRING WAGONS being unknown.
